

Product versions and applications

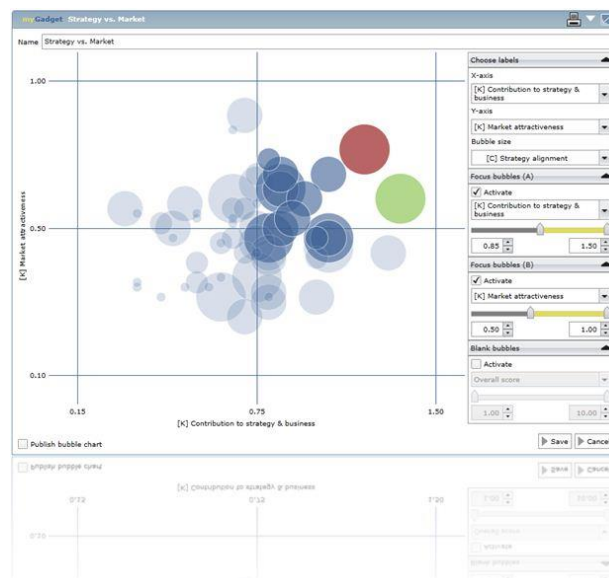

At the operational management level the project data which is important to you is indicated on a daily basis. The display can be depicted in a tabular form or graphically.

Your company key factors (KPIs) are evaluated automatically. A traffic light system compares the current values with your specified tolerance limits. You get alarmed about the state of dates by SMS or e-mail when they have been beyond the green range for a longer period. This allows you to recognise critical situations before they escalate.

At the tactical management level, you can conclude your projects to program groups manually or automatically. These can be compared with each other to separate the wheat from the chaff. You are able to compare the performance of your product groups or the regional markets, for example.

At the strategic level of leadership you have the option to rate your projects based on a company-wide, user-defined list of criteria. The rating takes place in a portfolio matrix as it was designed by the Boston Consulting Group. For instance, this enables an evaluation of strategic business units on the basis of current market growth and competitive position.

With the built-in Balanced Scorecard, you have the ability to measure, control and document the activities of your company concerning vision and strategy.
